The fragment is passed between the piano bass and the violin four times, with detached chord and single-note alternations from the right hand played against the violin statements. Presto Kreutzer Sonata - Op. The piano chords also move to more colorful harmonies.

The first two bars are directly derived from the minor-key Regenlied melody. Schumann once remarked on this fact. It sweeps down in an arpeggio, then back up. The piano accompaniment following the G-minor cadence turns around and winds downward, extending the phrase by a bar to lead to the second contrasting theme. As syncopated violin descent ends the passage, which has shifted the music up to its peak, the imitation breaks and the violin begins to play leaping octaves. Two strong motions to a cadence are followed by a long ascent to the top note.
