It has some great quotes. A story of a genius oddball and his adventures, I just swallowed this book like the whale did to Jonah. Olcott Helena Roerich J.

Ricard is also the author of Caring Economics: I had mixed feelings about it.

I thought it was a work of fiction at first because some of these stories are just that ridiculous. It's a story about a man who builds busted weird rafts and sails them across oceans without dying in the process, but it's also about this football formation that he invents. But there is a subtext that he probably did a lot of hurtful things yet that is never mentioned.

Had never heard of Poppa Neutrino before reading this book, notwithstanding there were certainly some slow points to this book, overall it's a fun read.
