Girard believes this to be the genesis of archaic religion, of ritual sacrifice as the repetition of the original event, of myth as an account of this event, of the taboos that forbid access to all the objects at the origin of the rivalries that degenerated into this absolutely traumatizing crisis. Unlike Eric Gans Girard does not think that there is an original scene during which there is "a sudden shift Anorexie et désir mimétique (French Edition) non-representation to representation", [11] or a sudden shift from animality to humanity.
