To promote the effort, Larson also gave a few promotional interviews, and pointed out that the two-volume set doubles neatly as a murder weapon. Suddenly, the lightbulb dinged:

Your email address will not be published. It turned out that the police had allowed the eyewitnesses to sit in the same room as they waited to be interviewed. Since his retirement, Larson has tossed us a few crumbs.
Again, the effect is remarkably persistent. It makes me feel creative.
