More Terrances Hayes and Melissa Broder read new poems, plus the editors talk with Jennifer Bartlett about poetry and disability. Letter to the Editor. It is saturated with powerful emotional sincerity that never crosses into, w seems that tripe like this is all that is popular in our times, but no matter how many of these 'poets' are mass created by social mediums like tumblr, or through mere accident it does not change or alter the fact that their writing skills are, essentially, nonexistent and their words only capable of drawing the attention of other wannabe hacks like themselves. These are not Shakespearean or Spenserian sonnets, but what ought to be called Colemanian sonnets after Los Angeles poet Wanda Coleman, whose improvisational free jazz approach to sonnets is the starting Hip Logic (National Poetry Series) for these poems.
